

Map out your day

To optimize your time at UT, it's imperative to take advantage of one of the university's greatest resources: the surrounding city of Austin. Arguably the best city in America, Austin is host to so many events and quirky sites, native Austinites can't even run out of new things to do. For this skill module, pick three locations (an event, restaurant, random place in the city you've always wanted to see, etc.) you'd like to visit say, next Saturday, and create a map and directions to take with you on how to get from one place to the next, and back home. You can use Google Maps if you'd like—you don't have to hand draw a map. (I know most of you are science folk, and likely artistically challenge.)

Three rules:

1. Each location you pick must be at least half a mile away from the next.
2. You can't drive. Walking shoes, busses, bikes and unicycles only please.
3. You must ride a CapMetro bus for at least one of the legs of your journey. You can place your bike on the front of the bus while you ride.

Happy exploring! Email Clara Fraden at clara.fraden@gmail.com with any questions.